From the Minister

The Queensland Government is committed to reforming the youth justice system to make our communities safer, address the causes of offending and reduce youth crime in Queensland.

The Youth Justice Strategy Action Plan 2019-21 (the Action Plan) heralds a significant milestone in our youth justice reform agenda, which aims to reduce the number of children and young people offending and re-offending in Queensland.

The Action Plan sets out the practical steps to implement the Working Together Changing the Story: Youth Justice Strategy 2019-2023 (the Youth Justice Strategy) and builds on reforms introduced by the Queensland Government, including:

- reinstating court-ordered restorative justice conferencing
- implementing the findings of the Independent Review of Youth Detention
- ending the treatment of 17-year-olds as adults in Queensland's criminal justice system
- responding to Mr Bob Atkinson's Report on Youth Justice
- responding to recommendations from the report by Townsville Community Champion, retired Major-General Stuart Smith: Townsville's Voice: local solutions to address youth crime.

Since the Youth Justice Strategy was launched in December 2018, there have been further reforms:

- $332.5 million of investment to tackle youth crime, announced in April 2019 - actions associated with this investment are prioritised in the Action Plan
- a new Department of Youth Justice, formed in May 2019
- new programs implemented to reduce the high number of children remanded in custody and ensure the safety and wellbeing of children currently held in police watchhouses
- proposed amendments to the Youth Justice Act 1992 to remove legislative barriers to children being granted bail.

Through this Action Plan, the Department of Youth Justice and its partner agencies will hold children and young people accountable for their criminal behaviour. These agencies will also address the causes of crime, and engage with families and communities to develop positive, sustainable and culturally appropriate solutions.

A key focus of our work will be to reduce the over-representation of Aboriginal and Torres Strait islander children and young people in the youth justice system. This Action Plan includes a range of actions that will help improve outcomes for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children.

I am committed to reducing the use of watchhouses to accommodate children on remand. If children do need to be detained, we will do everything possible to keep them safe and address their needs. In order to maintain public expectations of community safety, it is necessary to build contemporary, secure accommodation that is safe and appropriate for serious or repeat offenders.

We are continuing to change the story for young people, but we cannot do this alone. It requires a fundamental shift in the way government, non-government, community organisations and businesses work together to support families, deter young people from committing crime and help them change their own story. This Action Plan is a key mechanism to deliver this change.

Youth Justice Strategy Action Plan 2019–2021

This Action Plan sets out the practical steps to implement the Youth Justice Strategy over the next two years.

The Action Plan was developed in consultation with Queensland Government agencies and the Youth Justice Strategy Reference Group, comprising community leaders, industry representatives and criminal justice experts.

It focuses on doing more of what we know works, working in partnership with communities, engaging differently with young people in trouble with the law, and delivering entirely new services and infrastructure.

The Action Plan supports the achievement of the Queensland Government's Our Future State: Advancing Queensland Priorities to reduce the rate of youth re-offending and crime victimisation.

Initiatives and actions also deliver on the government's responses to Mr Bob Atkinson's Report on Youth Justice and Major-General Stuart Smith's report Townsville's Voice: local solutions to address youth crime. The Action Plan includes:

- new programs and approaches delivered through $332.5 million youth justice investment
- actions to build on and extend existing capacity
- important reforms which are already underway that need to be monitored to ensure they deliver change.

The tables in the following pages reflect the Strategy's four pillars: Intervene early, Keep children out of court, Keep children out of custody, and Reduce re-offending. Some actions assist with more than one pillar, but for simplicity and readability, actions are listed under the most relevant pillar.

The Action Plan highlights three other areas of significant work, which are important to reforming the youth justice system:

- working with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander families and communities to address their children's disproportionate representation in the criminal justice system
- responding to the different needs of girls and young women
- strengthening infrastructure and providing safe detention and watchhouse environments.

The majority of actions respond to findings or recommendations from recent youth justice-related reports. These are recorded in the following tables as:

- Atkinson Report on Youth Justice – AR
- Townsville's Voice: local solutions to address youth crime - TV
- Adjust our Settings: A community approach to address cyberbullying among children and young people in Queensland (Report on Cyberbullying) - CB

A comprehensive list of actions is available on our website www.youthjustice.qld.gov.au

The Action Plan will be reviewed annually to ensure we are making genuine progress, and there will be opportunity for new actions to be added. Monitoring and evaluation will check that real change is being delivered and ensure we make good progress on implementing actions and initiatives.

Pillar 1: Intervene early

We will connect children, young people and families to services and supports so they can address their health, wellbeing, safety and education needs.

Preventing crime begins with making sure that children are born healthy and are brought up safe and well. Prevention and early intervention is a responsibility of the whole community as well as government. Actions focus on ensuring that when children and families start experiencing problems, they receive help as early as possible.

Pillar 3: Keep children out of custody

Children and young people who have offended need to have a safe place to live, be supervised and supported to repair harms, address behaviours and reconnect with families and communities.

Research shows that detention can be harmful to children and may increase offending. This is especially relevant for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children. To keep children out of detention and the community safe, courts require a range of orders and interventions that decrease future offending. These actions mean that children who don't need to be in custody are kept out of watchhouses and detention prior to, and following an appearance in court.

Pillar 4: Reduce re-offending

To make our communities safer, children and young people who are repeat offenders must receive rehabilitation and support that stops re-offending and enables their successful reintegration with families, culture and communities.

The best way to reduce re-offending is by delivering evidence-based interventions that address the risks and needs of each child, and are delivered with the right intensity and frequency. These actions ensure that young people access programs to address their offending and personal circumstances, and they are supported to transition back into the community as law-abiding citizens.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children and young people

We will work with and empower Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities to deliver culturally-safe and responsive solutions that result in positive futures for their children and young people.

While the majority of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children and young people live safely at home and have developed a clear identity linked to their communities and culture, a substantial number experience significant challenges and disadvantage.

Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander children make up 78 per cent of children sentenced to detention, while only 8 per cent of children aged 10-17 in Queensland are Aboriginal or Torres Strait Islander. In 2017-18, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander young people were 29 times more likely to be held in custody on remand than were non-indigenous young people. These vulnerable young people experience a number of barriers and we need to change the way we do things to improve their life outcomes.

Elders and leaders within Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander communities are powerful agents of change. As part of our reform, we are committed to working with Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people – elders, community leaders, and families of young people to prevent and deal with crime in their communities.

Responding to the different needs of girls and young women

We need to do things differently for girls and young women if they are to benefit from reforms to the youth justice system.

There is a growing number of girls and young women in the youth justice system and they often have very complex needs. Most of our responses in the youth justice system have been designed for boys, but we know that young women's communication and relational styles are different to young men.

The problem behaviours of girls and young women are more closely linked to interpersonal relationships, trauma and abuse, mental health issues and developmental transitions.

We know that girls and young women are likely to have better outcomes when they have healthy and supportive family and peer relationships, develop empathy and learn ways of positive coping.

A special gendered response will be funded in the Bail Support Program to target girls and young women and respond to their distinct needs.	AR	Youth Justice

Strengthened and safe infrastructure

Serious and repeat young offenders will be held accountable for their behaviour and will be supported to address the causes of their offending in secure, safe environments.

While the Queensland Government implements reforms in partnership with community to divert young people from the system and to reduce offending and re-offending rates, new infrastructure will ensure there are safer places than watchhouses to remand children. We will ensure no child is held in a watchhouse any longer than is necessary to process their charges.

Population growth also places pressures on the justice system—new infrastructure will keep pace with population growth. Building new detention facilities allows us to plan over the longer term and decommission or re-purpose our existing and aging infrastructure.

These actions will ensure that children and young people are safe and have their needs addressed while in watchhouses, and those requiring an extra level of supervision are safely accommodated and can address their offending behaviour in a secure environment.
